“ We were shocked and saddened to learn that Desi had passed on, but find hope in the confidence that she has left behind the infirmities that had slowed her down (ever so slightly). My wife, Josie, and I had seen her at the Living Arts Studio in Maplewood the summer before last; she petted our chihuahua, Paco, and we admired her artwork. In three years working with her at Maritz, we got to know not only her near constant smile, but also the look of fierce determination that would come upon her at times. Most any task--she was going to do it herself. When things go slow, I would show her youtube videos of 60's British Invasion bands. Desi seemed to like the music and, being Desi, noticed that John, Paul, George, Ringo and the host of other bands they inspired were good-looking guys. While we are all disappointed that there were not more years in her life, the life she put in her years was truly amazing. May her memory be a blessing to Dawne, Lilli, and Jacob.
