“Doris was one of the Sherrell Court Moms. They didn't call themselves that, but they were an unofficial group of caring parents, herding and nurturing a bunch of kids, their own and any others that showed up on the circle to ride bikes, play manhunt, or just cause trouble. We lived and played and were noisy on the circle where Doris and my Mom were friends. She was one who contributed her time and love to keep us happy and safe in the neighborhood, share driving us to school events, scouting, or whatever. Force their husbands to stay in touch with their boys. (Anyone remember Indian Guides? Those Dads tried really hard). It was a great set of families pitching in, even if things weren't always great behind the scenes. They all did so much more for our childhoods than we can ever repay, but I remember Doris's house on the court, right across from ours, as a home it felt just like my own. Growing up I "found" her again out of college as a fellow church member and believer at Rock Hill Presbyterian. When a small group started their own small worship group with Doris in attendance, she was one to support me yet again at my early efforts to become a minister of the Gospel to a somewhat crazy bunch of independent Christians. (We were crazy in a good way) What Doris means to me is a bright spot of love, acceptance, and encouragement that filled out the frame of a young life, and made a difference in who I am as an adult. Not often you remember someone with unblemished fondness. Thank you, Doris. Enjoy your new life eternal. And I forgive you for that little yappy dog on your back porch that bit my nose when I was 7. All healed up, thanks to you. Scott Whitcraft.
