

Earl C. Clark

November 24, 1946 - July 7, 2017

Earl Cranston Clark was born November 24, 1946, in Dillon, South Carolina. He died of a heart attack on July 7, 2017, in Smyrna, Tennessee. He was preceded in death by his parents, Joseph and Anna Mae Clark, sister Gwen Graham, brothers, Kenny, Willie and Aubrey. He was “dad” to Niki Corbert and Quicha Bryson, two beautiful young women who he helped to raise from a very young age. He is survived by his brother, Joe (Fred) Clark and his wife Sue of High Ridge, Missouri, his sister, Audrey Yarbrough and her husband, Jim of Lake St. Louis, Missouri, his former wife and best friend until the end, Linda Clark of Smyrna, Tennessee. He leaves behind many nieces, nephews, cousins and friends.

Earl’s formative years were spent in Detroit, surrounded by rhythm and blues. It wasn’t until he heard Merle Haggard that country music stole his heart. Earl was a member of the Lumbee Indian Tribe and the only Native American to achieve his level of success with one of his hit songs, “Can’t Break It To My Heart” being played over two million times. “Renegades, Rebels & Rouges”, sold one million copies. “I Found Jesus on the Jailhouse Floor” touched many hearts. Early in his career, Earl was invited to Nashville by Ernest Tubb with the suggestion that he should drive tour busses for the stars to gain their attention and have his songs heard. It worked; he drove for Waylon Jennings, Willie Nelson, Jerry Reed, and many others. His songs have been recorded by George Strait, Johnny Rodriguez, Willie Nelson, Tracy Lawrence, Tanya

Tucker, and Tim McGraw. One of Earl's favorite stories was meeting his and his father's favorite performers, Martha Carson, who wrote "Swing Low Sweet Chariot". He was honored to meet her when they were booked at the same venue. She then became the first person that he wrote with as he embarked upon his amazing career. 80 of his songs were published by BMI Publishing Company in Nashville, Tennessee.

Earl is a one of a kind. Met him at Hotel Preston years ago when Clinton, Jerry, Preston, Mike, Eddie and Chrislynn were playing there. He drew me pictures on napkins. Still have them. The pic is from a bus tour we did with Clinton . Tara Solomon Capps and myself are in the pic. Great times.
