“ Well LarryLife is a journey in which I am very glad we traveled together, especially at the end. But with any road there is a destination, you reached yours and I am standing here all alone, which gives me time to think.... So here it is: I will ALWAYS take care of your wife and daughter, knowing when we meet up later down the road I'll have a whole lot of stories to tell you. I miss you more then either one of us would have ever known.

“ I just wish I would have known you sooner in life. All the funny stories I have heard about the river and such. Like you, I thoroughly enjoyed a boat and the water that comes with it. You were such a funny guy and you will be missed. I enjoyed getting to know you at the Hideaway and didn't mind at all that you always stole "my" seat. I was just teasing you about it anyway to bring you out of your shyness. You were a man of few words but said a lot with a look and I loved that ! I know you are in a better place now and here on earth we will cherish the fond memories we have of youuntil we meet again.

“ I miss you papa. These past few weeks have been the hardest weeks I think I have ever had to deal with. I know you're not suffering and for that I am grateful. There are many memories and it's hard to narrow it down to one. You were the man I respected most in this life and you was my best friend growing up. It's hard to not have you here right now but I know you're keeping an eye on me. It's not goodbye, it's until I see you again. I just want you to know I love you and it hurts like hell not having you here. I'll be strong for you and meme. We will see you again someday and I cannot wait. I hope I make you proud. Love Anthony

“ Larry was a man of few words, yet he had many to say that weekend we went camping, especially the morning it stormed and we all had to huddle in the camper with Larry in his underwear, swaring at the awning. It will be a memory that always makes me smile and one I will never forget!

“ Larry was not only my guardian angel when I had an accident in front of his house, but through him I got to know and treasure a new friendship with Irene. My thoughts and prayers you and your family, Irene. You should take comfort knowing you were such an awesome caregiver for Larry. I hope that within time, you will be able to reflect on all those wonderful memories the two of you shared, especially those of your camping experiences.

“ My good friend Larry, we had a lot of fun at the river, and a lot of fun building the hideaway. We drank a lot of beer and moonshine, had fun playing music. We had a lot of conversations about life and all the crazy people in the world, and I will miss that. I know you are better off now but it's hard for us to let you go. We are all going to go someday but some of us just go to soon, and my friend you left us way to soon. But I will see you again, and we will have a shot of moonshine together. Love you like a brother Larry.
