“ Crash raised me from the time i was 5 he had always been supportive of any decision i made and life and helped me follow the right path in life, Crash was my step father but felt more of a real father. He was always there to talk to me and gave me the best advice that he could, i loved him so much, even with his faults he was a good father. He was a wild biker bastard. but was the most sensitive dad to me. he loved me more than i knew, now i only wish i could rewind to take every moment with him into appreciation. anything i needed he tried his best within his will to give to me, he would go without nothing to make sure i had something. when he was mad and having a bad day i always seemed to make him smile. he was my dad and one of my best friends, taking bike rides with him is the best memories i have with him. he tried his best to look at the good in life but struggled to be a happy person. he blocked people out so that he wouldn't hurt them, the few he let in saw the true crash, and grew to love spending time with him. he was a wonderful dad, husband, and friend to those who knew him. he has a big space in my heart that will never be replaced by anyone. i love you crash daddy and you will forever be missed
