“ She was named after a legendary bird that is reborn from ashes and Hailey's comet that shows up once in a lifetime, is bright, beautiful and only lasts for a short time just like our daughter who we lost at 11 weeks but had no idea she was still there with her fraternal twin Elena who we are also awaiting arrival for in the next 6 weeks or less I will say I did get to hold our tiny little one and say my goodbyes she was developed enough to find out she was a girl and to see she had a smile on her tiny face and my nose an inch long she is the first baby to be born the way she was in the hospital and from what we are learning in the united States as well all my drs and nurses were in shock as Justin and I were as well we never expected to get to meet Elenas lost twin we lost early at 11 weeks as it doesn't normally happen this way... but she is being cremated so we can take her home where she always belonged in the first place and it felt only right to give her a name as beautiful and as rare as she is... that way when Elena feels like a piece of her is missing since she lost her twin she can keep her close and the teddy bear we received with her heartbeat before she passed away as we knew she didn't have long as she was implanted in my csection scar which unfortunately made it there was no chance for her to survive past what she did.... two months ago on Jan 15th my father passed away unexpectedly is in the afterlife with her and as amazing of a man that he was I couldn't ask for a better guardian over our angel daughter Pheonix... we grieved her loss then and still are now as no parent should ever have to lay thier child to rest but I'm so glad I got to meet her in the end even though she was born asleep... her tiny smile gave us comfort that she will be ok and watching over her sister along side my dad...
